Is there a way to change the icon for the "Home Folder" icon? A: Look at Home folder.desktop file and change the Icon part: A: Go to /usr/share/applications/nautilus-home-folder.desktop In this file, edit the Icon=/usr/share/pixmaps/nautilus-home-folder.png part. A: Yeah, in Gnome 2.3, if you take the icon out of /usr/share/icons, you'll also be able to change its name and size. Q: How to get valid_session_token for validation and verification I'm trying to write a simple class which validates and verifies session token. I am not concerned with actual getting the token from the browser. The problem I'm facing is how to get a valid_session_token? I was thinking of saving the last token obtained in a cookie and on each request, comparing the current token with the cookie for validating the session. But this doesn't seem to be a good approach as session token can get reset using black-hole URL. I thought of saving the last session token at server side, but then if the cookies get deleted from the browser, how would I make sure that the server can retrieve session tokens? Please tell me a better approach. Any help would be appreciated. A: The approach mentioned in the question will work, however, there are chances that the token got expired and cookie was deleted, hence, the server won't be able to recognize the cookie's value. To tackle this situation, you can implement the following three functions, which will take care 648931e174

Therefore I have to call DoSomething without an object to this class. So I do something like this: MyClass* obj = new MyClass(); obj->DoSomething(); But this results in the following error at compiling: Error 1 'MyClass::_field' is a protected member of 'MyClass' c:\...\myclass.cpp Since the method is not static and it is protected, is there any way to access the field? A: Your DoSomething function needs to be public for the compiler to allow it in the inheritance hierarchy, that's why. C++ would require some additional mutable checks (a "friend"-declaration), but in C# the compiler is quite smart - in your scenario it clearly disallows access to protected members, as you've seen. A way around this is to cast to the derived type and call the protected method. MyClass* obj = new MyClass(); ((MyClass) obj)->DoSomething(); A: From another post I found this
